Known for its bacchanalian feasts, Boccondivino is the place to come with colleagues who enjoy wine to the fullest—the jovial waiters certainly keep it flowing. “By the third bottle of wine your client will sign anything,” quipped one satisfied customer. If you have a difficult contract to negotiate, head here.

If you are deep in conversation, you will not be distracted. Ordering from the menu isn't necessary: the waiters appear at your table with seemingly endless regional delicacies. The cured meats (pancetta di Casteggio, prosciutto del Mugello) are delicious, as are the many different pastas. The sommelier can help you match your food with the right wine.

Don't be intimidated by the award-winning cheese carriage. Try the toma di Roccaverano or taleggio di Premana—both are regional specialities.

Boccondivino is one of the few top restaurants in Milan with a separate room for smokers.
